

Corruption of Power

(Director's POV)

It is a peculiar burden to have a name that no one remembers. I am Lynex, though that identity has long been buried beneath the immense weight of my title: The Director.

I oversee the bureaucratic nightmare of managing half-humans, quarter-humans, and the "lesser" beings we politely label as Heroes—individuals chosen by God to execute His cynical bidding across the multiverse.

I sat in my office, the leather chair groaning under the weight of my responsibilities. A cup of coffee materialized in my hand—a small mercy of teleportation magic.

"We have 509,239 registered reincarnated beings," I said, reading from the holographic display. "The Japanese Embassy calls it getting 'Isekai'd' into different worlds. But here, we call the pinnacle of this system the Pentarchy, named for the five strongest existences among them."

I looked up at my secretary, who was furiously typing my dictation for the upcoming summit speech.

"My job is to manage them, not control them," I continued, my voice hardening. "But Charlie... Charlie is no longer human. And monsters need to be controlled."

It was a dangerous game. It took immense funding and political maneuvering to keep Charlie placated. But the moment he sees Sana, all that money becomes worthless. If those two reconnect, he won't stop until he kills the One True God.

"Sir, why are we so scared of Charlie?" my secretary interrupted, pausing her typing. "I mean, yes, he is very, very strong. But isn't he physically a teenager? Surely, he doesn't have more battle experience than the veterans of the world. Someone can outsmart him."

I stared at her, stunned by the innocence. "Oh dear. Are you new to the job?"

She nodded, looking grim.

"Let me educate you," I said, leaning forward. "Firstly, since his first reincarnation, he has been effectively immortal and ageless. He transitioned himself into a vampire solely to acquire the Mana Cores of Titans, which he processed into the foundation of Sage Magic. Only a select few can even comprehend that power."

I took a sip of coffee, letting the bitterness settle before dropping the heavier truth.

"Secondly, when the Titan of Fate died, he cursed Charlie with Isolation. When God pushed Charlie back into our universe, that curse activated. It didn't just send him home; it pushed him back in time."

The secretary's grey eyes widened.

"He popped back into our universe near Babylon, roughly 1.2 million years before 2020," I stated flatly. "He lived through eras we only have fossils for. He is the inspiration for Gilgamesh in our timeline. He has a measured IQ of 195, coupled with ASPD and ADHD. I don't want to mess with someone who was there when Sun Tzu was writing The Art of War. Charlie has a signed copy in his private library—it's the only proof of Sun Tzu's actual existence."

The color drained from the girl's face.

"Moreover," I added, delivering the final blow, "if he gets trapped, or if everything 'fucks up,' he can simply nuke our universe using barely 25% of his power."

I looked at the trembling blonde girl. "Tell me, sweetie, what are your powers?"

"I... I can control liquids," she stammered.

"Hydrokinesis," I mused. "Useful in a generic hero's journey. Useless here."

She stood up, clutching her notepad, looking for an exit. "Sir... may I ask what Charlie's power is, exactly?"

"He is the physical embodiment of Chaos, Destruction, and Negation," I said, turning my chair to face the window. "As for his 'Last Day' abilities... we are yet to see what more he can do."

As the door clicked shut behind her, I tapped my comms device.

"Which reminds me," I muttered to the empty room. "Get me Sana in half an hour"

I knew before she arrived I would require to have finished planning my whole plan of pushing Charlie into the sword much like jinn we will give the sword to defetros and it wont ever cause trouble to anyone hopefully we get the support of sana because with her this task will be easier as the ritual needs the target to stand still for 12 mintues which sana can absolutely achieve.