

Objectively Monstrous

(Sana's POV)

They say that monsters are born that way. In a mana-soaked world where we fight for every breath, that might be a biological reality. But here, in my original world, few have ever truly earned that title. Perhaps it is because the Pentarchy exists, acting as the foundation that keeps humanity from the brink. I felt a flicker of that old pride—the weight of being a founding member—as I climbed the stairs of the Pentarchy building.

I was there to meet our Director and a representative from the UN to discuss Enuma. "Why are you like this, Charlie?" I muttered in sheer frustration as I entered the room.

"Oh, hi Mister William," I said, catching the gaze of the UN representative. He looked confused, likely because no one had bothered with an introduction.

"She is Sana," the Director began, his voice echoing with authority. "The Second Hero, a founding member of the Pentarchy and the Holy Kingdom. She possesses Omnipresence—the knowledge of God. She knows future, present, and past. She is our only way to find the objective truth in any situation".

Mister William pointed his blue eyes toward me in disbelief. "So, Miss Sana, I assume I don't need to tell you why I am here."

"Like always, the UN is here to ask for the neutralization of Charlie. And like always, I will tell you that even if we put every weapon made by mankind into use, we cannot defeat the First Hero. Besides, Charlie moved on from that title long ago". I rolled my eyes toward the Director, hoping for a shred of mutual agreement.

"That is why we have the Pentarchy," Mister William said, his arrogance flaring as he looked at the Director. "It is five against one. Surely that isn't a problem".

The Director's voice turned stern. "When we talk about Charlie, one must never forget he is unbound by causality, fate, or fiction. The only people capable of surviving even two minutes in a fight with him are Erbe, Défteros, and Sana".

He paced the room, his explanation cutting through the tension. "Creation, Fiction, and Omnipresence. Défteros could use Creation to distance himself, but Charlie would simply delete that space, rendering it useless. Erbe, our Fifth Hero, was reincarnated into a cybernetic parallel universe. His powers can trap enemies in a digital plane upon contact. If Charlie attacks from a distance, Erbe can transport those attacks elsewhere; if Charlie touches him, he is trapped in a plane where Erbe is the sole controller.

The problem is simple: all of this would only stop Charlie long enough for him to remove his limiter. Once he raises his power to a mere 10%, that digital plane will collapse. Sana can trap him in illusions, but once his Chrono Destinatus activates to preserve his fate, the cost to her becomes immense. At best, we buy fifteen minutes. That is our hope—nineteen minutes to talk him out of it, or we all die. The whole universe trembles when he walks. Charlie isn't a person or a weapon. He is a monster".

"Yet that monster is under control?" Mister William asked. The steady tremble in his voice indicated he was finally grasping the sheer contrast of power.

"He was reincarnated with the basic strength of a demi-god and an Authority of Destruction that allowed his blades to cut through the very concept of objects. He killed and ate eight hundred Titans—beings of pure concept with crystalline mana cores—which he used to drive his Grand Sage Magic. He was summoned back to that world, sacrificing nine hundred million monsters for his Index of Magic. Now he is there again, a full-blooded Archangel with a new title he has yet to reveal. We don't call him 'under control.' He is objectively monstrous, and monsters can't be tamed".

I said it with finality. I didn't want to waste my breath on a lost cause.

"Seems you know a lot about Charlie, Miss Sana," Mister William remarked. "Is it safe to assume you know each other outside of the Pentarchy?"

"Your wife is sleeping with your plumber, your driver, and your gardener, and you have erectile dysfunction," I said, meeting his gaze dead-on. "So now I know a lot about you, too. Is it safe to assume that I know your wife?"

Before he could stammer a response, I warped space-time around me, escaping that suffocating room in a flash of frequency.

"its time to see what is charlie up to" I said with finality as my body flowed mana around me.